The Intelligencer:

WE publish this morning as a matter of general interest and information at this time the liquor law of this State. Readers can not help noticing the fact that it is a pretty stringent law and capable of rigid enforcement. Liquor dealers who sell to minors or to persons in the habit of becoming intoxicated know what to expect when they read this law. All persons who deaire to see the cause of temperance advanced in our midst should familiarize themselves with the various provisions of the law upon these and other points.

The cornice on Mr. Welday's dwelling was thrown down at night was very calm. Parties were stationed on the houses opposite the burning buildings watching the falling flakes of fire, and succeeded in preventing any further damage. The Presbyterian Church, on Marietta street, was saved by parties on the roof with water. It was on fire several times, but no material damage was done. Judge Cowen had $3,500 insurance on his property, but could not, amid the confusion, give the name of the company or the amount on his dwelling. C. G. Hubbard had $1,200 in the Colum biana Mutual. No insurance on the remainder of the buildings.

A description of the place would be unnecessary, as all your readers, would be unnecessary, as all your readers, perhaps, know both its geographical position, and the society that compose it, better than I do myself. Moundaville is an old town—can, in age at least, almost compare with Wheeling. It is a fact also known to all who are acquainted with it, that for some cause our progress has been very alow: for while Wheeling shows tothat for some cause our progress has been wines and indures and ordinaries and cofday a population of 25,000, we cannot boast of that many hundreds. As to the
